

Im the Scariest Thing in the Jungle!

Named a Finalist for the 2014 Bull-Bransom Award for best childrens book illustrations with a wildlife or nature focus. Created in 2010 by the National Museum of Wildlife Art in the tradition of such prestigious childrens book illustrator honors as the Caldecott, Coretta Scott King and Hans Christian Andersen awards, the Bull-Bransom Award is named for Charles Livingston Bull and Paul Bransom, among the first American artist-illustrators to specialize in wildlife subjects. Both artists had tremendous impact on younger masters of wildlife art including Bob Kuhn; both created numerous childrens books during their careers, including contributing illustrations to different editions of Jack Londons classic Call of the Wild; and both are well represented in the National Museum of Wildlife Arts permanent collection. Dave Derrick has created a fantastic picture book that is entertaining, informative, and laugh out loud funny. When you add in his expertly drawn gestural illustrations, you have, simply, perfection. I wish I had thought of this! Chris Van Dusen, illustrator of Kate DiCamillos Mercy Watson book series Daves curiosity for the natural world is always obvious to me in his work, and he transfers that love for life to who ever chances upon it. His drawings and compositions show the wonder of the natural world, while his humor and his story layer it with life. Matt Nolte, Pixar David conveys movement and life in his pieces through strong poses and powerful gestures. Artists for Conservation In India the Bengal tiger is the king of the land.
